REMEMBER.

Philadelphia Press.—If Benjamin Harrison had been re-elected President, the country would not have had the present panic. That is not ill. The panic being here because of "the clause," if it had been in effect, would be back to square one and to place immediately in the Presidential chair Benjamin Harrison or any Republican of his quality and views, the panic would have been stayed, and that is not ill. The panic being, on, if Grover Cleveland's honest purpose to do the right thing on the silver issue had been joined with a clearer grasp of what to do and how to do it, the panic would not have been stayed, but it would have been greatly mitigated. A sound heart and a firm will are much in such a crisis, but a sound heart and a firm will united with a sure head and an unerring hand are much more.

The Business Way!

The business way

to advertise is to take space by the year, take pains with your advertisements in making them attractive, and change them at least as often as once a month.

You may think there are methods when you don't need to advertise.

We have never seen that.

Use the daily seasons for looking over your stock and running of that which is becoming out of style or un-fashional, and giving bargains.

If you have space by the year, it costs you no more, and you can make it profitable by converting unusable goods into money, and re-investing the money in those things which are suitable.

Where is that banner now?

Greenwood (Ind.) Review—During the last campaign the Democrats of Indiana displayed a banner in their processions bearing the inscription:

VOTE FOR GROVER CLEVELAND AND RUSSELL FOR YOUR WHAT?

A liberal reward will be paid for that banner at this office, and no questions asked.

Just 100 years ago Monday, the 11th, President WASHINGTON left the corner stone of the Capitol in the United States.

The historic act was a staggering country humbug. The Nation, of which the Capitol was to be the soul and center, numbered less than four millions of citizens. In the great world of statescraft and international ambition it held no assured place. It had no army. It had no navy. Its Treasury was bankrupt. It possessed neither commerce nor manufactures. Its Government was weak with the weakness of untried youth. Its diplomatic representatives waited in the anteroom of foreign princes and endured gross affronts from the rulers of third class powers. The Kings of Europe and their ministers looked across the Atlantic from behind a hedge of bayonets, with hostility mingled with contempt. There were some statesmen sagacious enough to see in the infant Republic that had for its leaders such men as WASHINGTON, FRANKLIN, JEFFERSON and ADAMS the menace of future disaster to the cause of monarchy. But the transverse cloud on the horizon of divine right was hardly larger than a man's hand. The peril to throne and scepter from the revolt of long oppressed masses of France seemed greater a thousandfold than from the distant and struggling American commonwealths.

The furious Jacobinism of France was the pride of the armed despotism of NAPOLEON. The Declaration of Independence was the dawn of enduring human freedom. The American Republic was founded, not on popular passion, but on an idea. Even WASHINGTON and his advisers could not estimate the might of the principle of equal rights and popular Government which the American Revolution introduced into a world filled with the despotism of castes and Kings. To-day a century of progress crowns their work. The humble corner stone is an imposing pile whose proportions are worthy of the Nation whose legislators it shelters. The country hamlet is a superb capital city. The four millions of Americans have grown to sixty-five millions. The stain of slavery that marred the Nation to whom on July 4, 1851, DANIEL WEBSTER delivered his notable oration on the foundation of the Capitol, extends, from coast to coast, from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

The example of the United States has been the impulse and inspiration of the movement for independence from Britain. Englishman absorption from its struggle and given to the continental masses a substantial measure of freedom and self rule. A brighter glory, a higher significance effect on the great crowd that were gathered in the city of Boston, where city was no better measured, but while the city was no better measured, and the gaiters went on.

While the rain was pouring down Saturday morning James Hunt, one of F. J. Millet's men, hauled down the iron spikes from the top of the electrically building where the cables of all nations are grouped. This was the sequel to a difference of opinion on the part of Mr. Millet and Chief Barrett, of the department of electricity regarding the propriety of hoisting the great flag of Ireland on their great day at the fair.

Chief Barrett, inspired with a spirit of patriotism, ordered the flag strung on the electricity building. Mr. Millet has charge of the colors at the department of electricity. The difference when the flag of Erin was run up and he ordered James Hunt, one of his subordinates, to pull it down. Mr. Hunt was quick to obey orders and the flag of Ireland was quickly hauled down. Mr. Millet and Hunt then came in an open carriage up the street. The Chief Millet and three of his men ran to the electricity building and Hunt cut the haliards and the flag fell limp and wet at the feet of the crowd which had gathered about the building regarding the flag of Ireland. The flag was quickly hauled down. Mr. Millet and Hunt then came in an open carriage up the street. The Chief Millet and three of his men should arrive and issue specific orders regarding the affair.

Mr. Millet explained that no flags were run up at the exposition whose nation was not recognized as a nation. He said that it would be fully as appropriate to plant an anarchist flag as that of Ireland. The purpose, said Mr. Millet, "but it has not been hoisted on any of the flag-staffs. This department will not put up a flag unless it is ordered to do so by exposition officials."

Chief Barrett, in his argument, "ordered my men to pull it down that day," said he, "in honor of Irish day. We have so many Irish-American citizens here I thought it was nothing more than right and courteous that this recognition of their colors be given them."

The parade was a big one and a fine one. The principal feature of it was the number of broad-shouldered, brawny and athletic looking men who participated. These were not only in the ranks of the Gaelicath, but in organizations which were occupying a prominent position in the line but also in the ranks of the well drilled Irish military organizations from every part of the country. They all wore their uniforms in bright regalia, flanked by aides, many of whom were cavalrymen, in their magnificent seats in the saddle attested, brandished the precious sword which they belonged to. In addition to the organizations which followed the militia were the various Catholic civic societies including the Catholic order of Foresters, temperance and church societies and literary organizations.

There were all in great military coaches, with streamers and banners of green flying to the breeze and uniformed buglers wearing the Irish colors were the distinguished guests of the day. Among them were the lord mayor of Dublin, the lord mayor of the city of Liverpool, his wife. These were the principal guests of honor, though EDWARD BLOKE, of Canada, and Mr. FITZGERALD, of Boston, received the marked attention due visitors from beyond the state and from foreign lands.

These three were well known by reputation to the crowds, particularly those of Irish blood, that gathered along the line of march, and people tipped and strained necks to get a look at them. The lord mayor of Liverpool was the first of all eyes. Everybody, whether Irish or not, appeared from his talk and actions to be anxious to see what a real live lord mayor looked like, anyway. They saw in Mr. Sharpe an unshaven, unshaven, grinning gentleman attired in a Prince Albert coat of ordinary length, a silk hat and a dark four-in-hand necktie. He wore a green rosette in his buttonhole. The lord mayor is tall of medium build, with a marked nose and a prominent chin, a pleasant expression of countenance. In response to the cheers offered him as a greeting by the multitudes he bowed smilingly and repeatedly, and doffed his hat with a graceful gesture. The processions formed on Midway Plaza and marched down the main street, the principal attraction on the grounds.

GREEN FLAG.

Unfortunate Occurrence at the Beginning of Irish Day.

A Conflict of Orders in Respect to the Irish Emblem.

It is Dashed Down From the Electricity Building—Ireland is Not Recognized as a Nation—A Riot, Wet Day Follows to the Order of the Irish Heart.

WANTON, Oct. 2d.—The weather started in horribly Saturday morning, and along about midday there was no prospect of a clearance. A more dismal-looking day in the calendar could not be imagined. The sky was overcast, there was a drizzling rain, the air was cold, and the ground was sticky and flooded. It must have had a discouraging effect on the great crowd that were gathered in the city of Boston, where city was no better measured, but while the city was no better measured, and the gaiters went on.

While the rain was pouring down Saturday morning James Hunt, one of F. J. CATRINO GARZO.

The Noted Bandit in Our Midst For Some Time.

While the Troops Were Hunting Everywhere For the Desperado

He Was Complicately Enjoying the Nights at the World's Fair, and Shopping at No Less Conspicuous Place Than the Fairer House, Under an Alias

New York, Oct. 2.—One of the noted Catrino Garzo's interests and most daring exploits, it is said, is his visit to Chicago, where, under assumed names, he and his lieutenant, Gen. Ruiz Sandoval, spent the early part of August and lived in a less conspicuous place than the Palmer house.

While Mexican and American troops were scouring the land and racking their brains to discover the possible hiding place of the "Revolutionist," he was enjoying the exposition to his heart's content.

That is what Rudolfo G. Canton, the Railway King of Yucatan, and his nephew, Felipe G. Canton, one of the Mexican commissioners to the World's fair, say. Felipe Canton knows Gen. Sandoval, and said him in the corridors of the Chicago hotel and restaurant Mexican, a friend of the editor, declared he recognized the outlaw Garzo. Mr. Canton says there is no mistake about the matter. Garzo was pointed out to him in connection with Sandoval.

"I tried to get their names on the hotel register," said editor Canton when seen by a reporter at the Hotel Imperial, "but both had taken fictitious names. Sandoval was making arrangements of a new revolutionary movement to end the rule of Diaz, and so far as I can learn, neither he nor Garzo was molested in Chicago. I saw the general in the second week of August. His room was opposite mine. Whether they are still in this country, I have no idea, but to Mexico I can not say. They disappeared from the hotel suddenly."

R. G. Canton declared there was no chance of a revolution in Mexico. Garzo was considered merely a plunderer there, and Diaz was better liked than ever, and his policy had incurred a strong feeling in behalf of the conservatism of the people as it is now conducted.

A LOVE TROEY.

One of Two Girls Suspect the Other, and Then the Girls Are Once More.

CHICAGO, Oct. 2.—William Smith, while in a fit of jealousy, shot Henry Miller in the right thigh, and then went to his own room and cut his throat from ear to ear, causing almost instant death.

The struggle between the men occurred at No. 11 in West Thirteenth street, where both men harbored, and which is also the home of a young woman over whom the trouble occurred. Both men had been paying attention to Miss Pauline, a young German girl, 21 years old.

Early Saturday morning the two men met in the street in front of their boarding place. A heated argument took place, which terminated in a fight. Smith was badly wounded in the encounter. At which Smith, in met his rival, and without a word of warning drew a revolver from his pocket and fired one shot at Miller. The bullet took effect in the latter's right thigh.

Smith, evidently under the impression that he had killed his rival and before any one could reach him, seized his razor and cut his throat. The keen-edged blade severed the jugular vein, and death followed almost immediately. Miller is in a very precarious condition and his recovery is doubtful.

AN AWFUL DOOM.

Physician Sentenced to Solitary Confinement for Life.

ILLINOIS, Mich., Oct. 2.—Dr. Foglesong, a physician, was sentenced to solitary confinement for life for killing his wife, who was largely infertile, Saturday morning for sentence. When asked if he had anything to say why sentence should not be passed, the doctor called God to witness that he was innocent of the crime, and declared he had been paying attention to a woman other than he and his wife. If I had made an error that caused her death it was one of judgment and not of the heart.

He was sentenced to solitary confinement for life at 10 o'clock Saturday morning in the afternoon. He was taken to prison in the afternoon. His attorney will endeavor to obtain a new trial. While the trial of the doctor was in progress, it was remarked that the doctor's first and second wives also died under peculiar circumstances, and that there is a suspicion that he had killed them.

A CURIOUS CALCULATION.

Around the World 206 Times.

An eminent physician has made a curious mathematical calculation in giving the dimensions of the human heart in relation to the size of the life-time of the blood as it passes through the heart, a distance of 5,150,000 miles, which, in a continuous stream, would reach around the world 206 times.

Keeping in view this constant strain on the heart, and taking into consideration the air it receives from over-exertion, aero-holic and other stimulants, it is a wonder that it is only 20 years after the heart has been put to its work, and causes death? The fact can be readily understood that one in four has a weak heart, also the importance of treating this organ with the strictest and most delicate care.

Reading this, will you not be inclined to rejoice in your heart, and to rejoice in the life of your heart?

While suffering from a severe attack of heart disease, and expected to die, he said, "I am a man now, I sincerely rejoice in my heart."
